Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Thursday 04 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Showers during the morning but mostly dry tonight.

Today:
A briefly dry start but an area of widespread showers will soon arrive from the south, giving heavy downpours over some parts. These showers will gradually clear later in the afternoon. Feeling mild. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Tonight:
Residual showers will continue to clear, leaving the night largely dry with clear spells at times. However, the odd shower is still possible. Minimum temperature 4 deg C (39 deg F).

Friday:
Mostly dry through the morning with sunny spells and the chance of a few showers. These will increase in frequency, affecting more areas through the day. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Sunshine and scattered showers on Saturday. Dry and feeling cold on Sunday but a few showers are possible. Drier on Monday but breezy and turning very cold.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.